Molecular basis of regional variation in the expression of mdr1a gene expression in humans. Human mdr1a, a gene of unknown function, is located in a high copy number segment on chromosome 7q. High level expression of mdr1a in tumor cells appears to confer resistance to anticancer drugs. A genetic polymorphism has been reported for this gene. In this report we have investigated the basis for variations in expression of the mdr1a gene in different tissues. A shorter mdr1a gene expression product was detected in liver and kidney of a patient with chronic liver disease, indicating an effect of chronic damage on mdr1a expression. Even though the liver contains a high copy number of mdr1a sequence, it was not expressed, suggesting that additional factors are important. Northern blot analysis demonstrated differences in mdr1a expression among individuals. We have identified four nonallelic and one allelic expression variant of the mdr1a gene. All variants use the same promoter, but have different 5'-untranslated regions.
